LOVE AND MURDER;

CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE.

There was a certain heart-sinking look about the stranger as Mr. Talbot told him he was in no need of help in his warerooms, which caused that gentleman to look up again from his ledger, and eye the young man closely.

With a half audible sigh, and an air of hopeless, utter despondency, the object of his scrutiny had turned to leave the counting room.

"Stay a moment, young man—what can you do?"

"I have never been accustomed to any kind of work except secretary, but I possess an excellent education, and sufficient energy to undertake and persevere in any pursuit that may offer itself."

There was a certain something in the young man's manner that interested the good Mr. Talbot; so he told him to take a seat behind him and answer a few questions.

The young man pleased Mr. Talbot. A mutual confidence springing up between them, the stranger confided to the good merchant his pressing necessities.

He was a Pole by birth: he had been despoiled of home, fortune and country at one blow. He had served as secretary for several years to an English nobleman; but owing to a misunderstanding between them, he had come to this country and had been here several months, but not being able to get anything to do, he had spent his last penny, and had not tasted food for two days.

Mr. Talbot did not read him a lecture on the uncertainty of human prospects, but he put his hand into his pocket and handed a well-filled wallet to the stranger, bid him go and make himself comfortable, with good cheer, and then to return to the counting-room; told him that he would take him in his employ for the present, and that the contents of the wallet was but a part of his salary.

With an expression of gratitude, the stranger left Mr. Talbot, wallet in hand. There was something in the lustre of his large, earnest gray eyes, that told the wealthy merchant he had not misplaced his confidence.

Ildo Sternberg entered into his new occupation with a zeal and comprehension that showed Mr. Talbot he had not over estimated either his mental or moral capacity.

Sternberg was employed to write Mr. Talbot's most confidential letters, and to attend to his most private accounts; for the merchant, at that time, was deeply involved in several speculations, all of which, were to benefit the whole system of commerce.

After several months of unremitting labor, the schemes ended in a sudden failure. After honorably satisfying the calls of all creditors, who were involved through the unfortunate speculations, Mr. Talbot was enabled to continue his regular business, though on a much reduced scale.

"A professional friend of mine wishes a secretary, will you accept the situation, Ildo? The salary is good—far better than I can offer you, for just now, alas, I can offer you nothing. I mentioned you to my friend, telling him that he could not find one more capable and more unexceptionable in every way than you."

"I cannot sufficiently thank you for your good opinion of me," replied Sternberg. "I will accept your friend's offer, whatever it may be, on your recommendation, and the result may prove your good word for me not an unjust one."

"Mr. Redfield, the professional gentleman with whom Sternberg now took up his abode, was a lawyer of much repute, practicing in the city, and dwelling with much style in the country.

"Take care of yourself, Ildo, my boy," said Mr. Talbot, shaking Sternberg's extended hand, and looking upon him with the fondness of a father.

"I hope you will not forget your old friends for your new ones," said Miss Talbot, with a pretty blush. "Father and I shall expect to see you as often as you can make it convenient to call."

Fanny Talbot's bright eyes lingered with him as he entered his new abode. They looked up from the paper on him day after day, as they lay on the desk. They accompanied him in all his outings and incomings—their light had become the guiding star of his life. But yet, in his numerous visits to the merchant's house, Ildo had preserved the same respectful distance from the bright Fanny that had marked his conduct from the first.

Mr. Talbot was once more prosperous, and learning wisdom from experience, he pursued the beaten path of wealth, leaving dangers to the uninitiated.

It had grown towards the close of summer, when Ildo Sternberg entered the office of Mr. Redfield somewhat later than usual, and told him that he could remain no longer in his employ. In vain Mr. Redfield urged him for a reason; he could give none, merely saying that he had made up his mind to go to South America.

In about an hour after Ildo left the office, Mr. Redfield was summoned home. His eldest daughter had been found dead in the grove of woods by the seaside, which had ever been her favorite walk. Her sister had seen her start in the direction of the grove, in the early morning, and had also seen young Sternberg take the same path a short time after, seemingly following in her footsteps.

Isabella Redfield was a belle; a dark, wilful beauty, full of headstrong passion, and from her wit and sparkling playfulness, was the idol of her father and mother, and in fact of the whole household. Some of the field laborers had seen Sternberg closely conversing with the beautiful girl in the grove, and as soon as the news of her death had reached them, (for it spread like wild fire,) they came forward to give their testimony. One of the laborers said that the young lady seemed very much excited in her manner, and spoke angrily, and that Sternberg appeared to be expostulating with her, supplicating her to do something that she seemed very resolute in refusing.

The testimony crowded in so closely against poor Sternberg that a warrant was issued to apprehend him, and so rapidly had been all the proceedings that he was taken, on board of a South American packet, within five minutes of the time of sailing.

"Suspected and apprehended for murder!" exclaimed Fanny Talbot. "The murderer of my friend Isabel! Oh, papa, how horrible! but he is innocent. He never could commit murder. The court will find the real murderer and acquit Ildo," and Fanny Talbot spoke confidently. "I hope so, my child; but appearances are very strongly against him."

"But, papa, you don't believe him guilty?"

"My child, I will not say what I believe. I dare not believe anything. My good wishes are with the youth, but I hear it will go ill with him at the trial."

"Oh, papa," responded Fanny, fervently, "do not say so, even if you think so." Meanwhile the day of the trial approached. Fanny Talbot had watched the tide of public opinion to discover that the universal voice was against the ungrateful man who could murder his liberal employer's daughter. Fanny also watched her father's countenance to gain some consolation from him as to Ildo's chance of acquittal, but she could glean nothing there.

"To-day the trial takes place, dear father."

"Yes, my daughter."

"You are to sit in the jury box—one of the twelve?"

"Yes, dear Fanny."

"It is a horrible thing to decide upon the fate of a human being; and terrible must be the remorse of him who sentences a brother to an ignominious death, and afterwards, when it is too late, finds the murdered man as innocent as the one he was thought to have murdered."

"How strangely you talk!" said her father, startled by her words and manner.

"Father, Ildo Sternberg is innocent."

"Very likely," gloomily responded the father.

"And, dear father, you must not permit his death; if all others insist, you must refuse to be convinced. They cannot hang him without your sanction."

"But, my child, my friendship toward him is known—my reputation may suffer, may be ruined, in consequence."

"But then you will have saved an innocent man from a frightful death. And, dear father, no one can suspect you, who are so upright, of partiality."

"Well, dear child, we will see what can be done to save him."

"Father, you must promise me!" exclaimed Fanny Talbot with unwonted vehemence; and then she poured into her father's ears the deep and abiding interest she took in the young man; also, her deep seated convictions of his truth and innocence, and the grounds of these convictions, saying that if he was hung, and could have been saved by her father, she could not live to bear the horror of the thought. Deeply affected by his daughter's pleadings, Mr. Talbot left her to attend the trial, with a solemn promise to do all in his power to save the prisoner.

The trial proceeded—the evidence was all convincingly against the young Pole. His own words were few and pointed; he declined any explanation of the case, but distinctly and firmly pronounced that he was not guilty of the awful charge preferred against him.

His calm, majestic manner did much toward establishing his innocence in the minds of some. But all the evidence being so strong and decided against him, the presiding judge closed his speech with pronouncing the prisoner "guilty," and recommending the jury to remember the responsibility resting on them, and their duty to society.

The impatient multitude without and within waited the decision of the panel for twelve long hours. At length they returned and the crowd was hushed into silence.

"We cannot agree!" was the response of the foreman, to the usual question.

The bench was perplexed. The president went all over the whole of the evidence, again dilating on the points which proved so conclusively the prisoner's guilt.

The jury again withdrew, and thirty hours time were passed before they pronounced a second decision, and then the verdict of eleven was "guilty," while the twelfth juror firmly persisted in the belief of the prisoner's innocence, and solemnly avowed he would suffer death himself before he would assist in his condemnation.

Finding this man so solemnly impressed with the prisoner's innocence, and his arguments in his favor still sounded, so convincingly in their ears, to the astonishment of all present, the eleven unanimously concurred with the one in a verdict of acquittal.

The prisoner being therefore set at liberty narrowly escaped the lynch law of the infuriated mob without. A strong police guard alone protected him.

Once more Ildo Sternberg stood upon the deck of a vessel bound for South America. A boy whom he recognized as one in the employ of Mr. Talbot, approached him and placed a letter in his hands. The captain's order, in the meantime, had been given; the anchor was drawn up, and the brig under way.

With a cat-like spring the agile messenger jumped upon the wharf, received a lusty cheer from the jolly jack tars who witnessed the feat.

Ildo leaned his head mournfully upon his hands, and gazed abstractly upon the receding shore.

Suddenly he bethought himself of his letter. He opened it, and to his surprise, a roll of bank bills fell from it. They were all bills of a large amount. The letter merely said:

"You will not refuse the inclosed from one who believes you innocent. When you make your fortune, which I know your energy will achieve, in the new country to which you are going, you can repay them, if you like, to your father, FANNY."

Three years after the above occurrence, a young man lay upon his death bed, raving in his delirium to see Mr. Redfield, the father of the murdered Isabel.

Mr. Redfield stood beside the bedside of the dying man, who was to have been the husband of his daughter.

"I am sorry to see you so low, my good Augustus," said Mr. Redfield, kindly. "Oh, speak not to me! It was I who stabbed Isabel!" exclaimed the young man wildly.

All were horrified at these words. His mother and sister imputed them to the delirium of the disease; but when he grew more calm, and solemnly repeated the assertion, they were forced to believe him.

Before his death he related all the particulars of his unnatural deed.

It seems that the proud Isabel, from the time that the handsome Sternberg entered her father's house, had smiled less graciously on her affianced—Augustus Raymond. Stung to madness by jealousy, he had watched them together, had heard Isabel, the evening previous, appoint the grove a meeting place; that she had something very particular to say to Sternberg.

Augustus repaired to the spot before daybreak—secreted himself—heard the conversation—saw the reluctance of Sternberg—heard the passionate Isabel avow her love for him, and urged him to make her his wife. At first she was angry, but he soothed her into quiet, and left her, after confessing to her that he loved another. She acquitted him of attempting in the slightest to gain her love; and as he turned to depart, she smiled sweetly upon him, and said she should try to forget him, except with the love of a sister, but that none other could ever supply his place in her affections.

Perfectly infuriated with passion, Augustus Raymond stood before her, upon Sternberg's departure, and reproached her more like a demon than a man, with her perfidy.

Her manner was so haughty and indignant, that insane with jealousy and passion, her discarded lover plunged his fatal steel into her bosom; and then dashing into the thicket, made his escape with the cunning caution that eluded the eyes of all, and locking the fearful secret up in his own breast, he escaped without being suspected of the foul deed.

The repentant lover died, and the father of the murdered girl wished to make reparation to the falsely accused Sternberg.

Finding the turn affairs had taken, Fanny Talbot confessed to her father, with a countenance suffused with blushes, that she knew the abiding place of the acquitted Ildo. She had corresponded with him faithfully in his exile.

A few weeks more, and the now happy Sternberg returned to his friends more highly in favor than he had ever been before.

It was with a proud and unrelenting heart that the fond father placed his daughter's hand in that of Ildo Sternberg, who, under an assumed name, had won both fortune and fame during his exile—who had also proved himself so well worthy, in all ways, of the trust now reposed in him—the sacred trust of the safe keeping of a woman's heart and happiness.

AN ANCIENT COUPLE.—Runa Rockwell was married to Rachael Darling sixty-eight years ago—on the 11th of Nov., 1790—he having been born in February and she in May of 1773—so that neither was eighteen years old when they married. They celebrated their "golden wedding" more than eighteen years ago. They have lived till quite recently, on a farm in Redfield, Fairfield Co., Conn., which belonged to Mr. Rockwell's father and grandfather, and which he has recently given to a grandson. A tavern was kept there long before the revolution, as well as long afterward, and when the British burnt Danbury, the father of the present senior Rockwell conveyed his wife and child, then four years old, out of the British line of march and then shouldered his musket and joined the defenders at Ridgefield. The then child, now old man, still clearly remembers his return with his mother to their home, and their arrival there about the same time of several Americans who had been wounded in the fight and were brought in to be cared for. Both he and his wife are still hale in body, clear in mind, and fluent in speech. They were recently on a visit to a daughter in the upper part of Westchester county, New York, where a friend visited them and obtained these particulars.—N. Y. Tribune.

WANTED TO KNOW.—The name of the tune which was played upon the feeling? If the cup of sorrow has a saucer? In what form the phantoms of doubt most often appear? What is the fine when people become intoxicated with happiness? If any one was ever strangled who hung on a doubt? How many dutiful sons belong to old Mother Church? If the light of other days was gas or electricity? The name of the Irishman who got to the top of the morning? If any one ever felt fatigued after the exercise of forbearance? If the girl who clung to hope hadn't a slippery hold?

A fellow was told at a tailor's shop that three yards to cloth, being wet, would shrink one quarter of a yard.

"Well, then," he enquired, "if you should wet a quarter of a yard would there be any left?"

"I see you are in black. Are you in mourning for a friend?" was propounded by one friend to another, in the street, the other day. "No: I am in mourning for my sins." "I never heard that you had lost any," was the instant and keen reply.

An Irishman went to live in Scotland for a short time and didn't like the country. "I was sick all the time I was there," says he, "and if I had lived there, till this time I'd been dead a year ago."

East Haddam Journal.

SATURDAY MORNING, MAY 28.

Hon. Hiram Francis Cone.

Judge Cone, whose death is announced as having occurred at Greensboro, Ga., on the 18th inst., was born in this town, and was the eldest of three brothers, who acquired their primary education in their native town, and graduated with marked scholastic distinction—Judge Cone in the class of 1818; Theodore C. Cone in 1820, who died in 1831; Frederic T. Cone in 1826, who died in 1834.

By a reference to the triennial catalogue of Yale College for the year 1818, we are surprised at the large number of distinguished conferees in that year, and the variety of their pursuits. Among them was the Hon. Cyrus H. Beardslee, Rev's. Eleazer Brainard, Jos. H. Breck, Alfred Chester, John C. Coit, Ex-Gov. Henry Dutton, Rev. Hector Humphreys, Hon. Samuel H. Huntington, Rev's. Wm. Mitchell, Joel W. Newton, Hon. Thomas C. Perkins, Rev. Thomas L. Shipman, Professors Edward Turner, Louis Weld, and Vice Chancellor Frederic Whittlesey.

In college, Mr. Cone, the student, was highly esteemed for good scholarship, keen perception, strength of intellect, honorable bearing and brilliant conversational powers. Before graduating he selected the legal profession as the field of his future labors, and with the fairest omens of success. Having received his full share of paternal patrimony in acquiring an education, he resolutely determined to launch his bark and buffet the waves and storms of a tempestuous world single-handed and alone. He proceeded to Georgia, and was for a time partially occupied in giving instruction, all the while laboring diligently to acquire a thorough knowledge of his profession, which, when acquired, he pursued with a diligence that secured him ample means, and with an ability that characterized him as one of the most eminent of the profession.

Thus prospered, he married the ward of Gen. Dawson, late U. S. Senator from Georgia, and was soon after elevated to the office of Judge of the Supreme Judicial Court of that State, an office the duties of which were by him ably discharged for several years, when he resigned, on the ground that to sit in judgment on the frailties of humanity was painful to him, while to advocate the cause of the weak and oppressed was his chief delight; consequently he resumed the practice of his profession, and continued to act therein to the time of his decease. Of political distinction he was never ambitious.

Mrs. Cone died several years since, leaving three children, two sons and a daughter, who are now arrived at maturity, and who have been educated at New Haven. In the discharge of his parental and filial obligations, no man ever did more. His correspondence and annual visits and presents to an aged father and mother, and an only surviving sister, have not only contributed infinitely to their happiness and comfort, but have developed the true and exalted character of the man, whose death will be deplored by all who knew him.

THE LEGISLATURE of the state has been in session now some three weeks, but thus far there seems to have been little business of importance to transact. The question of the Temperance law we observe has again been brought forward, and a new measure of this character, in the nature of a license rather than prohibitory law, was presented last week, and referred to a select committee. It is difficult to say what is advisable in regard to the matter of Temperance legislation. We have already on the statute book what was esteemed at its passage one of the most stringent and judicious laws that could be adopted, to restrain the sale of ardent spirits, and consequent intemperance. The public sentiment demanded it, and it was passed. It is not a rash declaration however, to say, that it has become comparatively a dead letter, and quite inefficacious, at least in our more populous towns and cities, for the avowed goodly objects aimed at. What is the next best course to be pursued, and if further legislation is to be had, what shall be its nature, are questions which should be carefully and candidly considered. The whole subject is one, that, at all events, should be elevated above party politics.

LIFE INSURANCE CONVENTION.—The American Life underwriters Convention, which was held at the Astor House, New York on Wednesday, was composed of delegates from the various life insurance offices of New York, Philadelphia, Boston, Hartford and other cities of the Union, as well as from the chief cities of Upper and Lower Canada. The primary design of this movement is to place the practice of life insurance upon a sound, reliable and permanent basis. To accomplish this, one great desideratum is wanting, which is, insurance statistics and a combined experience table, constructed from the actual records of the various life-insurance offices now doing business in this country, instead of depending, as heretofore, upon the old English Northampton and Carlisle tables. To supply this desideratum is the object of the American Life Underwriters, Convention. In subordination to the above, there are several matters of minor importance to be brought before the Convention for discussion and action.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.—Rev. A. Geer has resigned the charge of St. John's Church, North Guilford.

The Rev. S. F. Jarvis has accepted a call to the Rectorship of St. John's parish, Salisbury.

Rev. Stephen Rogers, late of Northfield, was installed over the Congregational Church in Wolcott, on Wednesday, May 25th.

The Congregational Church and Society of Ansonia, have given an unanimous call to the Rev. A. L. Frisbee, which he has accepted. He will not, however, enter upon the duties until next winter, as he has not yet completed his theological course.

Rev. Wm. S. Smith was ordained in Guilford, May 3d. Sermon by Rev. Dr. Storrs of Brooklyn, N. Y.

Rev. E. D. Kinney, for twenty-one years pastor of the Congregational church in Darien, was on the 3d inst, dismissed from his pastoral charge by Fairfield West Association, and is engaged for the coming year to supply the church on Long Ridge, in the northwest part of Stamford, Ct., twelve miles from his former location.

Bishop Williams ordained to the Priesthood the following persons, at St. James' Church, Norwich, on Tuesday:—James Colroy, assistant rector of Dr. Hallum's Church, of New London; Samuel Hall, of St. James' Church, Glastenbury; Henry T. Gregory, of St. Andrew's Church, Thompsonville; and Delancy G. Rice, of St. John's Church, Essex. Fifteen clergymen were present, besides those ordained.

The Republic of Uruguay, in South America, have expelled the Jesuits, who have overstepped their mission and created discord, suspicion, and ill-will among families and private individuals. What is strange in the step taken, is, that the present Government, which has driven the Jesuits out of the country, is the same that introduced them a short time ago.

A Baptist Church has been organized at South Norwalk, and the Rev. Mr. Gowen has received and accepted a call as the pastor.

The next annual meeting of the General Association of Connecticut will be the hundred and fiftieth, and is to be held at Norwich the third Tuesday of June. On Thursday there will be a Century Celebration, arrangements for which were made at the last annual meeting.

The Rev. Wm. H. Cook has removed from Roxbury, and accepted the charge of St. Mark's Church, New Canaan, Ct.

At a meeting of the Standing Committee of the Diocese of Connecticut, held at Stamford, April 26th, 1859, the Rev. Samuel Hall, and the Rev. Henry Trowbridge Gregory, and the Rev. Thomas Edward Pattison, Deacons, were recommended to the Bishop to be ordained Priests. And Elisha Mulford, A. M., Yale College, a Licentiate of the Congregational Denomination, to be received as a candidate for Priest's Orders.

The American tract Society of Boston voted yesterday to separate from the New-York Society, of which it has been a branch since 1825, and by a resolution expressed its approval of the publication, under its auspices, during the current year, of any well-written tract against the slave-trade. Reports of the proceeds at the Anniversary meetings in Boston of other religious societies will be found elsewhere.

An Irish paper announces, that a Mr. Keney, returning to town, fell down and broke his neck, but happily received no further damage!

Local and State Matters.

RETURNED.—W. B. Keency of this town who has been in Mexico and California for the past two years, arrived home yesterday morning by the Granite State.

SUICIDE.—On Sunday morning last, the wife of Mr. Edmund Ferree freight agent, at the Middletown R. R. Depot, cut her throat with a razor inflicting a severe wound, and killing her almost instantly. She had been sick for sometime with a nervous complaint, and is supposed to have been a little deranged.

She leaves a husband and three children to lament her untimely end.

FATAL RAILROAD ACCIDENT.—On Thursday evening last, the 6.30 P. M. train from Middletown going around a curve about a mile from the city, ran over a man named James Mahoney, who was lying across the track. The cowcatcher struck his head crushing it in a horrible manner. He was not seen until too late to stop the train. A coroners jury was summoned and rendered a verdict in accordance with the above facts.

Among the gentlemen selected by the President as the Visiting Board this year, to the West Point Military Academy, is Colonel Rufus Baker, late democratic candidate for Congress in the Norwich district.

CONNECTICUT PATENTS.—LIST TO MAY 17th.—Merritt L. Brooks, Chester, Improved Drill Stock.

Geo. E. Cowperthwait, Danbury, Improvement in Machinery for hardening Hat-Bodies.

Onri C. Ford, Collinsville, Improvement in Water-Wheels, Charles Page, Meriden, Improved Signal Door-Bolt.

Frederick S. Stoddard, Litchfield, Improvement in Foot-Power Machine. Summer Cooper, Windsor, assignor, Improvement in Window Sash Supporters.

Nelson Goodyear, late of Newtown, Henry B. Goodyear, admr., Improvement in Manufacture of Rubber Fabrics. (This is an extension of the famous "Goodyear patent" seven years from May 13, 1859.)

A RARE OPPORTUNITY.—Those of our readers who desire an opportunity to hear good singing, will not fail to attend Miss Brainard's concert at McDonough Hall, Middletown, on Thursday evening next, June 2. Miss B's talents as a vocalist are of the highest order, and all who have heard her, expr as themselves as better satisfied and more pleasantly entertained than by any other singer. Her enunciation is perfectly clear and distinct, and each word she utters is plainly heard in all parts of the house. She has a talent which will soon render her equal to even that "Queen of song" Jenny Lind.

FROM CALIFORNIA.—The Overland Mail arrived at St. Louis on the 21st, bringing California papers to the 30th ult. A private letter from Fort Yuma says that Col. Hoffman and his forces have made a treaty with the Mohave Indians. He will be censured for not chastising them.

Major Prince has started from Los Angeles under an escort of Maj. Carlton, commander of dragoons, with $147,000 to pay the troops in Utah.

The Settlers of Tracker Meadow attempted the destruction of some wolves by strychnine bated with beef, which being stolen and eaten by a band of Warpo Indians resulted in the death of seven of them.

At Columbia, on the 27th, there was found a lump of gold weighing 37 pounds 7 ounces, worth $8,000. It was dug within the city limits.

Mining throughout the State was more prosperous than ever known before, and mining labor exceedingly well paid.

In Oregon the Republican Convention, convened April 21st, adopted a platform, and nominated David Logan for Congress, and W. T. Matlock Penitentiary Commissioner.

Governor Whiteacre had issued his proclamation convening the Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon on the 16th of May.

The Snake Indians, who live on the western slope of the Blue Mountains, had made a descent upon the friendly Indians of the Warm Spring Reservation, killed several, and carried off their stock.

A violent outbreak against Americans had occurred at Hermosillo, in Sonora. Every American was notified to leave at once, under penalty of death for remaining.

The population was greatly excited, thronging the streets, insulting and threatening Americans, evidently with full consent from authorities, who seemed to share the prevailing sentiment. In one or two instances, houses belonging to Americans were forcibly entered by the mob, who threatened a general massacre of every American in the city. W. H. Jarvis, and several other refugees, had arrived at Tubac, in Arizona.

FROM KANSAS—DISTRESSING ACCOUNTS FROM PIKE'S PEAK.

Sr. LOUIS, Tuesday, May 24, 1859.

The regular correspondent of The Democrat, writing from Denver City, on the 8th inst., recounts a most deplorable condition of things on the Plains. Many of the emigrants were dying of starvation, while others were subsisting on prickly pears and wild onions found along the road. The Stage Agent reports picking up a man named Blue, who was reduced to a skeleton from starvation. He had started with his two brothers. One of them died, and the remaining two ate his body. Another died, and he in turn was nearly devoured by the survivor. A man named Gibbs had reached the mines in a starving condition, and he stated that his party, numbering nine, had all perished. Many graves are reported along the route, and much property had been abandoned and destroyed on the road.

The writer of the letter says that the departures from the mines are about equal to the arrivals.

About 500 returning emigrants reached St. Joseph on Saturday, all of whom confirm the previous accounts of the suffering and privations on the plains.

A Fort Kearny, May 8th, correspondent of The St. Joseph Journal says that not less than 900 wagons belonging to returning Pike's Peakers passed the Fort during the week previous. The disappointed gold-seekers are selling their outfits for almost a song. They sell their flour at from $3 to $5, bacon at 10 cents; horses and cattle they are selling for almost nothing, and wagons and handcars they give away. There are some returning who have not a cent to take them back, while those who have anything are hurrying back as fast as they can to keep from being robbed by the rest.

DENVER CITY, K. T., April 18, 1859.

We have had quite an exciting time here for the last few days, as you will have heard. A murder was committed here, and the murderer hung summarily. This passed off quietly. Then came the other, between two parties from St. Louis, well-known not only in St. Louis, but throughout the Missouri River—Capt. P. T. Bassett and John Scudder. They came in the same party last Fall, and passed through Leavenworth a few days before I left.

They got up a quarrel on the way out, in relation to the Express Company about to leave for Fort Laramie. It appears that John Scudder was either connected with it or supposed to be, and Capt. Bassett remarked that he did not want John Scudder to have anything to do with his letters, as he would steal them. The remark reached Scudder by some officious person, and he came over to Cherry Creek, where Capt. Bassett was at work fixing his house. Scudder had two men with him, and called Capt. Bassett out and asked him if he said he was a thief. The Captain said "No." Scudder then asked the Captain if he had said he did not wish him to handle his letters for fear he would steal them. The Captain then said "Yes" Scudder then drew his pistol. The Captain saw it, and grappled with Scudder, and quite a struggle ensued. When the Captain started to go away, Scudder fired, and shot him near the armpit, sideways, the ball entering his lungs.

After receiving his shot, the Captain said in a low tone of voice, "Gentlemen, John Scudder has shot me." Scudder replied, "I did shoot him, and am ready to deliver myself up to the proper officer, but not to a mob." He then left the crowd that assembled from all parts of Denver City, with the understanding that he was to stand his trial. Scudder was bound over, and placed in the hands of the Sheriff, D. D. Cook, who put a strong guard around him. The trial was agreed upon for Monday, this day. The occurrence took place on Saturday. Saturday night, Scudder was watched, but no attempt was made by him to escape.

On Saturday night and Sunday all was quiet, but on Sunday night the alarm was given that Scudder was gone. He and Carol Wood (also of St. Louis) left about 11 o'clock for parts unknown, on a pair of fast mules, and the poor unfortunate John Scudder is now at large, a wanderer on the earth. His capture in this mountain region is next to impossible, though many are in search of him.

We have, in addition to the excitement above, all sorts of rumors in relation to gold prospects—some for, and some against; but the real trouble is this; Hundreds of emigrants have arrived and are arriving without either money or provisions, or mining tools, guns or ammunition, and our stock is consumed and none arriving.

This is a feature in affairs here, we made no calculations for. We supposed all would come with at least three month's provision, but it is not so. Hundreds have arrived that we have to take into our houses and board, and we have not got it to spare. We are doing all we can to satisfy all, and so far have succeeded, but if it continues we will soon be out of everything. I hope no one will come here without their own provisions. Money will not buy provisions if we have not got it. Men cannot prospect or do anything else without provisions. This every intelligent man should understand. Besides, we have rather cold weather for this season. The mountains are still covered with snow, and little has been done lately.

MARRIED.

ICE CREAM AND REFRESHMENT SALOON.

THE subscriber takes pleasure in announcing to his friends, and to those who are not his friends, and to all the men, women and children in this vicinity, to the married and the unmarried, and to those who want to get married, and to those who don't, to all the young ladies and generous fellows, in short to every body who have plenty of loose change in their pockets and want to spend it for something good to eat or drink, but will promise not to get tight, whether they carry their money in their vest pocket, pantaloons pocket, coat pocket, or pocket book, that he has just opened a Refreshment Saloon, between Goodspeed's and East Haddam Landings, for their express and particular convenience, where he will be happy to see them every day, and wait on them in the most approved style. His Saloon will not be a low groggery, nor a tobacco covered bar-room; it is neatly carpeted, painted and furnished and will always have a clean and tidy appearance suitable for the entertainment of ladies as well as gentlemen; and where can be procured as good

Ice Cream, Pies, Cakes, Confectionery, Ale, Porter, Beer, Cigars, and the different kinds of Wines, &c., as can be found in the State.

There is not a single person in town between the ages of 10 and 90 who will not do themselves a great and serious injustice if they fail to visit an patronise this fashionable resort at least once a week. It is just the place that has long been needed here, and it is just the place where the good things will be served out in a style and neatness that can't help proving satisfactory.

Member of the Analytical School of Medicine; continues to apply
Dr. J. Clawson Kelley's Medicines, in the treatment of all Chronic and Acute Diseases, of Men, Women and Children.

The Analytical System, uncompromisingly opposes all mineral medicines, the deleterious practice of bleeding, and other fallacious resources of the old school or regular practice; it has asserted its superiority in the success with which it has been attended, and relies on Vegetable Remedies alone for the accomplishment of satisfactory results in the treatment of disease. In the fulfilment of its mission, the levelled dart of death for a while is turned aside, the sharp pang soothed, the fever fire allayed, the nerves braced once more: the heart cheered again, and balmy days and soft nights imparted.

A practical proof of its efficient action, will be presented to all, who will call upon Dr. Wright. Advice free.
